

Case Study 2

Jennifer was an international school student in Hong Kong. She transferred to a high school in the UK when she was year 12. After a few months at her new sixth form college, her mother contacted us and asked for advice as Jennifer was not achieving her targeted grades and wanted to know possible routes she could take to get in her desired university. As it is very difficult to transfer one UK high school to another in upper sixth form, our consultant suggested her to try the 1-year University foundation course for the subject she wanted to study, Law.

After thorough examination, our consultant again recommended a few universities with foundation course offer. After completing her foundation year, she is now studying Law at Durham University.
